

The Disability Gateway: Connecting you to culturally safe information and services

Disability
Gateway

Connecting you to information and services

Accessing culturally safe information and services is important for all Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with disability, their family members, and carers.

We might need some help

with where we live,
our health, getting a job,
or a range of other things.

Finding the right services and supports can help us do what we want to do and live the best life possible.

It shouldn't be hard to search for what we need,
and that's why the Disability Gateway is here.

The screenshot shows the top of the Disability Gateway website. At the top left is the Australian Government logo. In the center is the Disability Gateway logo with the tagline "Connecting you to information and services". To the right is the phone number "1800 643 787" and the text "Monday to Friday, 8am to 8pm AEST" with a search button. Below this is a navigation bar with links for Home, About us, Emergency contacts, Safety and help, National Disability Strategy Hub, and COVID-19. A decorative green patterned banner follows. The main content area features a photograph of three people sitting at a table outdoors; one man is in a wheelchair. To the right of the photo is a blue mouse cursor icon. Below the photo is an "Easy Read" toggle switch. At the bottom, the heading "Welcome to the Disability Gateway" is displayed, followed by the text "The Disability Gateway has information and services to help people with disability, their family, friends and carers,".

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with disability, their families and carers can use the Disability Gateway to search for the right information and services across Australia and in their local area.

It gives us:

- Trusted and reliable access to appropriate local services and supports.

- Different ways of seeking support and information, including a website and a phone line.
- Easy to use ways to search for culturally safe services that are right for us.

The Disability Gateway can help us to find out about employment, housing, income and finance, transport and more.
